BAZAR BELLES.

The Tableau at the Pickwick Last Evening.

No Improvement in the Theatrical Business—Charitable Entertainments—Amusement Notes.

When the bazaar that is now being held at the Pickwick for the benefit of the Sisters' Hospital was being arranged for and the different departments were being appointed to the several ladies interested, the management assigned to Mrs. Garneau the task of presenting tableaux or some kind of entertainment at the hall last night. Mrs. and Miss Garneau were at a loss at first to know what to do. The tableaux are generally considered by most people to belong to the lowest order of the stupid class of entertainments, and unless great expense is gone to in their arrangement, their success is doubtful. To get up a performance of this kind was impossible in the short time allowed. Mr. W. B. Smith, who so well understands matters of this kind and who is always willing to lend his services, was appealed to for help. He discouraged the idea of tableaux, because many of the members of the Pickwick Club were hard at work on the rehearsals for plays soon to be given by the society, and consequently would not be able to give time to an outside performance. This idea demised, tableaux were discarded, and the management turned to the difficulties in regard to expense, for each lady and gentleman was to pay for his or her own costume. A series of scenes was arranged that reflects great credit upon Mrs. Garneau's management. The bazaar held in the lower part of the Pickwick, the auditorium upstairs being reserved for the entertainments connected with it. It was here, then, that a large number of society people gathered to look at friends arrayed in extraordinary and picturesque and extraordinary costumes and positions and groups. At 8 o'clock, after some music by the orchestra, was followed by the rising of the curtain and the disclosure of a very pretty scene. A woman in a gown of blue and white, and a man in a suit of blue and white, were the first to appear. As the scene unfolded, so as to give the effect of a distance and the figures that were grouped in the background, the scene was a very pretty one. After a few moments' wait a representation of DEATH, RESURRECTION AND LIFE was given. Death rather had the advantage of her sisters, by having a heavy veil over her face and thus hiding her features from the audience. She was a lovely and sweet, and as this was her normal condition, she was not required to wear any special costume. Resurrection had the long train, generally considered the property of the dead, and she was dressed in a gown of blue and white. Life was dressed in a gown of blue and white. A DELEGATE'S MONEY.

It Disappears. Mysteriously. While He is Night-Sleeping With a Friend.

Captain Albert Freeman, president of the National Bank of Medicine Lodge, Kansas, alleges that he was robbed of $1,000 and his gold watch by a man named Wm. E. Moran yesterday, at the Southern Hotel, Kansas City.

Freeman pulled out a roll of greenbacks and handed him what he asked for. Moran and a friend, whom he introduced as John E. Moran, came from California and took several drinks. After walking around the town for an hour or so with his new-made acquaintances, the Captain returned to the hotel, and there made the discovery that his money and his watch were missing. Officers here, who were notified of the robbery, succeeded in arresting Moran, who was taken to the police station. Both were introduced to the time of the robbery, but only $28 of the money. It is thought that Moran, who whereabouts are now unknown, has been introduced to the time of the robbery.
